Course description

This study provides an overview of the literature examining various illicit strategies used by candidates to subvert democratic electoral practices. The main goal of the course is to introduce a recent and vibrant literature in political science and economics and to expose students to the most important areas of ongoing scholarly controversy. At the same time, the course introduces a range of research methods that allow researchers to document a range of illicit practices.

Course requirements and grading

This course covers a large amount of material during a very short period of time. Class attendance and participation is mandatory. In addition to class participation, the main requirement that will be graded will be a research proposal that extends or challenges one of the writings discussed in class or that proposes the study of a dimension of clientelism not considered by existing approaches.

Your final grade will be determined as follows:

(a) class attendance (20%)
(b) class participation (40%)
(c) proposal for research paper (40%)
OVERVIEW OF COURSE

Session 1: The study of electoral clientelism: Definition, research questions

Session 2: Research methods for the study of electoral clientelism.

Session 3
Patronage

Session 4 Vote buying

Session 5 Policy favors

Session 6
Ethnicity and clientelism

Session 7 Electoral coercion

Session 8 Welfare coercion

Session 9 Thugs and criminals

Session 10 Evaluating clientelism: Do voters punish or reward clientelistic strategies?

Session 11 Designing survey instruments to measure illicit strategies

Session 12 Discussion of research proposals